Schoolers

We Are Schoolers

Schoolers publishes educational resources under three imprints:
Sugar Bee, Schoolers and Guava Press

Sugar Bee Studios – Pre-Primary Learning Resources (www.schoolersbooks.com)

Sugar Bee Studios is committed to supporting the hopes and dreams of discerning teachers and parents by providing early childhood resources for active learning. We have fun-filled workbooks. Our Basic Book series has twenty-four workbook titles, all are colourful and attractively designed to provide enjoyable ways for children at the pre-primary level to build key learning skills. The material is organized for use by children at basic schools, infant schools, and kindergartens, to enjoy as they explore and learn the alphabet, numbers, shapes, animals, fruits, phonics, addition, subtraction, science, social studies, and so much more. Each workbook in the Basic Book series includes simple games and puzzles to help children develop attention to detail, build hand-eye coordination and thinking skills, as well as improve pencil and crayon control. In addition to our Basic Book series, there is also our Colour and Learn Integrated Workbook with appealing activities, delightful illustrations, and easy-to-follow instructions for learning ABCs, 123s, Colours, Shapes and Songs. All our first stage workbooks help to build solid learning skills in children during the key stages of their early development.

Schoolers Publishing – Pre-Primary and Primary Learning Resources (www.schoolersbooks.com)

Schoolers Publishing produces educational resources of the highest quality to foster the success of children at both the pre-primary and primary level. We publish a comprehensive range of authoritative texts that are invaluable to teachers, parents, and students. For example, in 2012, Schoolers launched the Spanish Today series of six workbooks which quickly became the leading material for the step-by-step teaching of Spanish as a second language in Jamaica. We are now a respected publisher of other quality educational titles and series, such as Little Learner Phonics, Neat+Nice penmanship books, Hola Spanish, My First Spanish and French Picture Dictionaries, Hello Language, Hello My Environment, Math Today, Music Master, and Doctor Bird Readers.

Schoolers is committed to providing an innovative range of teaching, reference, and learning resources. We will continue to support the aspirations of teachers and parents by providing exceptional pre-primary and primary school resources for great learning experiences.

Guava Press – Children's Picture Books and Young Adult Reading (www.guavabooks.com)

Guava Press is the happy home of fun children's picture books, as well as young adult reading material across many fiction and non-fiction genres. Our books and ebooks are entertaining, enchanting, and educational. We also seek to restore to print great writing of literary and historical distinction by authors like Claude McKay, Tom Redcam and Henry Garland Murray. Many of their works are appropriate for use in literature classes, drama productions, and festival competitions. Guava books are ideal for easy reading at anytime, day or night.

Harlem Shadows

Claude McKay's Harlem Shadows (1922) has moving, lyrical verses that capture his nostalgia for Jamaica, and empathy for the unjust plight of Black people around the world. These are passionate poems, with calls for human decency, dignity and justice in a needlessly cruel world.

*"If we must die, let it not be like hogs
Hunted and penned in an inglorious spot,
While round us bark the mad and hungry dogs,
Making their mock at our accursed lot."*

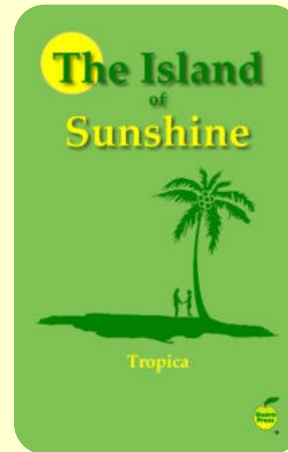

This collection includes poems such as:

- THE EASTER FLOWER
- FLAME-HEART

Tom Kittle's Wake

Henry Garland Murray's Tom Kittle's Wake (1877), recalls the story of a Jamaican fisherman, as well as his eventual wake. The author was a late nineteenth century newspaper editor and popular storyteller, who was probably the first person to write and publish his work in Jamaican Patois.

An excerpt from Tom Kittle's Wake:

Old Tom Kittle was a fisherman, and in his time had been notable in that respect. He had had many a "hairbreadth 'scape" and had been the hero of many a deed that might have won a place in story; but he had not been wont to recount them, for the reason that he never at any time thought of them as highly as other people did.

The Life and Exploits of Three-Finger'd Jack

William Burdett's The Life and Exploits of Three-Finger'd Jack (1801), tells the story of Jack Mansong, an African who was captured, taken to Jamaica and forced into slavery.

Jack escaped from the sugar plantation where he was forced to do slave labour by the British and ran to the mountains of the island. There he led a guerrilla group of around sixty rebels who fought, during the 1780s, for freedom that was not attained until well over fifty years after. Stories about him are still being told and he is one of the unsung heroes of Jamaica.

Runaway Cudjoe

George Cruikshank's Runaway Cudjoe (1856), tells the true story of a runaway slave in 1820s Jamaica. Cudjoe escapes into the mountains where he lives for the first time as freed man with other runaways. Their liberty is constantly under threat from the British military on the hunt. This story reveals the strong resistance that some Jamaicans demonstrated in their fight against slavery.

An excerpt from Runaway Cudjoe:
The wagon had just reached a more level road, and was proceeding with greater ease to the animals, when the head 'cartman' who, for some time past had appeared to be buried in profound meditation, suddenly called out to one of his young men— "Billy! come ya'."

"Wha' you want, Uncle Cudjoe?" replied the young man alluded to as he left his post beside the cattle, and approached his superior.

"Come ya', boy, an' tell me wha' Grandie Abba bin tell you say busha bin tell him," rejoined Cudjoe.

Becka's Buckra Baby

Becka's Buckra Baby by Tom Redcam was first published in 1905. The novella explores the social implications and unforeseen consequences when a young lady gives a black girl the Christmas gift of a white doll.

An excerpt from Becka's Buckra Baby:
Noel Maud Bronvola, this was her name and she could hardly ever remember repeating it to another in full without hearing the following comment expressed, or seeing it suppressed in the eyes that regarded her:—

"Noel, for a girl?" And then her mother was wont to reply:

"Yes, her father would have it so. She was born on Christmas Day."

Every one who knew him, or nearly every one, had said that Jack Bronvola was a peculiar man; and they were not slow to tell his peculiarities in detail, if you cared to hear them.

Maroon Medicine

Maroon Medicine by E. Snod (E. A. Dodd) is a collection of four short stories that portray the lighter side events in the Jamaican countryside. The four fictional stories are: "Maroon Medicine," "Paccy Rum," "The Red Cock," and "The Courting of the Dudes." They are sketches from rural Jamaican life in the early 1900s. They are humorous, as well as give valuable insights into people's lives during that period.

A Christmas Rebellion

Hope Masterton Waddell was a missionary in Jamaica when a slave uprising started after December 25, 1831, which lasted into the first weeks of 1832. A Christmas Rebellion is Waddell's recollection of this rebellion that is considered the largest slave rebellion in the British Caribbean. The uprising was also called the Baptist War because many of the rebels were Baptist denomination.

An excerpt from A Christmas Rebellion:
Early in December 1831 rumours of an impending servile war began to spread abroad and agitate the community. The slaves, it was said, had bound themselves by a solemn oath to each other to be slaves no longer. The conspiracy was discovered on Salt Spring estate, near Montego Bay, from the mysterious and threatening language of an angry negro to his overseer, which aroused suspicion, led to investigation, and thereby brought to light the whole scheme. The time was near for its being carried into effect, yet nothing seemingly could be done beforehand to prevent it.

A Narrative of Events Since the First of August, 1834

In A Narrative of Events Since the First of August, 1834, James Williams, a Jamaican "apprentice" (former slave), describes his experiences under the British apprenticeship system that was established as a transition period from slavery to free labour to facilitate the gradual abolition of slavery within the British empire in 1833. His account tells of the brutal punishments he had to endure, including numerous floggings and imprisonments. He also describes the prison conditions where the use of the treadmill was common, as well as how women were constantly abused in many ways. Williams concludes that the system of apprenticeship worsened the conditions of Jamaican ex-slaves, as the former slave-owners used the Jamaican legal system to constantly harass and punish them.

An excerpt from A Narrative of Events Since the First of August, 1834:

I have been very ill treated by Mr. Senior and the magistrates since the new law come in. Apprentices get a great deal more punishment now than they did when they was slaves; the master take spite, and do all he can to hurt them before the free come...

An Account of the Slave Trade on the Coast of Africa

Alexander Falconbridge was a surgeon on slave ships that carried African slaves from the West African Coast to the Caribbean. In An Account of the Slave Trade on the Coast of Africa he describes the many and varied aspects of this despicable trade that was legally undertaken for centuries. The description starts from when the mostly English and French ships first dock along the West African coast and the captains go ashore to acquire Africans. He then explains how the slaves were captured and brought to the coast to be sold. The process is explained, including their treatment during the Middle Passage across the Atlantic Ocean, to when they were sold into hereditary bondage in the Caribbean.

An excerpt from An Account of the Slave Trade on the Coast of Africa:

The slave ships generally lie near a mile below the town, in Bonny River, in seven or eight fathom water. Sometimes fifteen sail, English and French, but chiefly the former, meet here together. Soon after they cast anchor, the captains go on shore, to make known their arrival, and to inquire into the state of the trade.

An Exposure of the Apprenticeship

Henry Sterne's An Exposure of the Apprenticeship documents some of the unfair incidences that unfolded during the Apprenticeship period in Jamaica, which lasted from August, 1834 to July, 1838. Sterne outlines cases where the system operated mostly to the benefit of the former slave-masters and to the detriment of "the apprentices," mostly because interpretation and enforcement of the law was left up to the discretion of biased special magistrates.

An excerpt from An Exposure of the Apprenticeship:

On the 1st of August, 1834, and until very lately, I was an inhabitant of a populous country parish, called Saint George's. This parish has been noted in the annals of Jamaica for what is, out there, termed rebellion. Of this, then, most rebellious parish, do I now speak, from a lengthy, personal knowledge and observation.

Three Months in Jamaica

In 1832, Henry Whiteley, a young Methodist clergyman, travelled to Jamaica on a mission to preach the gospel to the Negro slaves and convert many to Christianity. Three Months in Jamaica is Whiteley's account of that visit. The account was published in June 1833, and is one of the few remaining records of the working conditions and methods of punishment that existed on Jamaican sugar plantations during the period (1655-1838) when the British system of slavery existed throughout the island.

An excerpt from Three Months in Jamaica:
I proceeded on horseback to New Ground estate the next day. On my way thither I saw much majestic arid beautiful scenery, and enjoyed the prospect exceedingly, until I came in sight of a gang of negroes at work. Most of them were females; and they were superintended by a driver, with the cart-whip in his hand. Just as I rode past, the driver cracked his whip and cried out, "Work! Work!"

The Case of George William Gordon, Esq., of Jamaica

The Case of George William Gordon, Esq., of Jamaica by Baptist Wriothlesley Noel examines events that led to the execution by hanging after the Morant Bay Rebellion in 1865 of The Right Excellent George William Gordon, National Hero of Jamaica. Noel details Gordon the successful businessman, Christian and family man, as well as the flimsy and unfair charges brought against him by the colonial government for suspicion of having planned the rebellion.

An excerpt from The Case of George William Gordon, Esq., of Jamaica:

As a Christian and a man of strong affections it was impossible that he should not use his influence to protect the weak from suffering wrong. More than many rich men do, he resembled the patriarch, who could say of himself, "When the ear heard me, then it blessed me; and when the eye saw me, it gave witness to me: because I delivered the poor that cried, and the fatherless, and him that had none to help him. I was a father to the poor, and the cause that I knew not I searched out; and I break the jaws of the wicked, and plucked the spoil out of his teeth."
